

Conexões III

Global and Transnational History Seminar

School of Social Sciences (CPDOC/FGV) and the Center for International Relations of FGV

In recent decades, under the title of global or transnational, new historiographical debates and theoretical and methodological approaches of the social sciences, produced in the North Atlantic axis, took shape by reflecting the new globalization phenomenon, accelerated since the 1970s. On the South, at the same time, rather than simply importing these new approaches to the reading of History and renewing a parochial relationship with Europe or the United States, scholars have been developing new lines of thought which are not limited to Nation-State political boundaries.

Therefore, research in the North and in the South of the so called Western world, have known new questionings and reevaluated connections and exchanges between societies, cultures and spaces that have been so far underestimated or disregarded.

The main goal of this seminar is to create a forum at FGV's School of Social Sciences that could become not only a space for researchers to present studies from the perspectives previously mentioned here, but also to understand the relationships and create bridges of dialogue between different new practices of research in social sciences and to contribute to a greater internationalization of Brazilian academic production.

Session I

March 10th (2 p.m. to 4 p.m. - Auditorium 1027) – Rafael Marquese: Professor at São Paulo University presenting his paper Tradições de História Global na América Latina e no Caribe, coauthored with João Pimenta at the journal História da Historiografia, v.17, p. 30-49, 2015 - followed by a debate session with professor Ynaê Lopes dos Santos (School of Social Sciences/FGV).

Marquese has a Ph.D. from São Paulo University in Economic History and is currently a professor at the Department of History – FFLCH/USP and coordinator of the Laboratory on studies about Brazil and the Global System (Lab-Mundi) at the same institution. His academic interests include Atlantic history, slavery, Brazil and the Global System

Session II

April 14th (2 p.m. to 4 p.m. - Auditorium 1027) – Maria Verónica Secreto: Professor at Federal Fluminense University, presenting her paper Histórias conectadas, histórias integradas: Brasil e Argentina em busca de um terceiro no século XIX, published at the journal Revista Brasileira de História, v.34, p. 89-99, 2014 – followed by a debate session with professors Alexandre Moreli (Center for International Relations/FGV) and Diego Galeano (PUC-Rio)

Secreto has a Ph. D. in Economy from UNICAMP and is currently a professor at the history department at Federal Fluminense University. Her academic interests include agroenvironmental history, compared history, labor history and slavery history. Her publications include: “Fronteiras em movimento. História Comparada Argentina e Brasil no século XIX.” (2012) e “Soldados da Borracha. Trabalhadores entre o sertão e a Amazônia no Governo Vargas” (2007).

Session III

May 19th (2 p.m. to 4 p.m. - Auditorium 1027) – Final Roundtable: This session aims to propose a review of the debates that took place during previous sessions of the seminar. It will feature the presentation of the paper "5 approaches to global history", by Professor Alexandre Moreli (Center for International Relations / FGV), with comments from Professors Américo Freire (School of Social Sciences / FGV), Marco Vannucchi (Laboratory of Studies on Institutions - School Social Sciences / FGV), João Maia (Laboratory of Social Thought - School of Social Sciences / FGV) and Matias Spektor (Center for International Relations / FGV).